

AP20 Rec'd PCT/PTO 11 MAY 2006

NewHairBEST AVAILABLE COPY*Description

NewHair is a full wig with an opening (feature 1) at the front (feature 2). This opening allows the wearer to reveal his / her own real hair, roots, scalp and hairline, thereby making it look like all the hair is growing out of the wearer's head. This is because the opening functions as a gap (feature 3) so it has hair on the sides that protrudes into the wig but is open at the front edge of the wig. The role of the gap (feature 3) is to deliberately expose some of the wearer's own hair (feature 5), which s/he brings through the gap, parts it sharply, and brushes over the wig, and in doing so reveals some of his or her own real scalp, roots and hairline (feature 6).

Existing wigs deliver a complete head of hair, but, regrettably, only at the expense of realism. Fringes and hair bands are used to hide the stitching at the front, but because they also conceal the wearer's own roots and hairline, it is apparent that the hair is not really growing out of the head and therefore the hair is fake. NewHair addresses this by incorporating an opening which functions as a gap (feature 3) at the front of the wig (feature 2), along the front hairline. Whether the opening and gap is on the left (feature 7), in the centre (feature 8), or on the right (feature 9), it adds much-needed realism to the traditional wig, because – for the first time ever – the wearer can show off his or her genuine scalp and roots.

BEST AVAILABLE COPY

- Figure 1: Plan view of the scalp of a NewHair wig with the gap on the left, before the hair is stitched in
- Figure 2: Perspective view of a NewHair wig with the gap on the left, after the hair has been stitched in
- Figure 3: Perspective view of a NewHair wig with the gap on the left, as worn by the wearer
- Figure 4: Perspective view of a NewHair wig with the gap on the left, worn by the wearer, where she has parted and brushed down her own hair that jotted out of the gap
- Figure 5: Perspective of a NewHair wig with the gap on the left, shown on a mannequin head
- Figure 6: Perspective of a NewHair wig with the gap in the centre, shown on a mannequin head
- Figure 7: Plan view of the scalp of a NewHair wig with the gap on the right, before the hair is stitched in
- Figure 8: Perspective of a NewHair wig with the gap on the right, shown on a mannequin head

- Feature 1: The opening in the NewHair wig
- Feature 2: The front edge / periphery of the wig
- Feature 3: The gap in the NewHair wig
- Feature 4: The positioning of the attachments for securing the NewHair wig
- Feature 5: The wearer's own hair as it jots out of the gap in the NewHair wig
- Feature 6: The wearer's real scalp and roots as revealed by the authentic parting created the wearer has created after bringing through some of his / her own hair through the gap in the NewHair wig
- Feature 7: A left parting NewHair wig where the opening and gap appears on the left
- Feature 8: A centre parting NewHair wig where the opening and gap appears on the centre
- Feature 9: A right parting NewHair wig where the opening and gap appears on the right